IN MEMORIAM.

A lovely exotic, transplanted from heavenly shore to shed the fragrance of her virtues on earth, a brief season, has been recalled. But a few months have elapsed since liver, just blended as one-two loving hes the meridian of her earthly existence, that the twilight of time was already despening about her life's pathway; neither knew that the cypress was so soon to be entwined with the pathy to be suddenly strained, and the foun tains of the affections to well waters of Marah o'er the now inanimate form whose spirit has flown. So young, so lovely, the orange leaves of her bridal wreath not yet begun to fade, her life barque had but fair!

formed in twin alliance creit was engulphs by the tidal waves of death, leaving its conort alone in the desclate waste of a track less sea. But she is not dead, only gone before; between two worlds har spirit-life still novers like a star backering those she best loved on to the eternal shore. Pearened a brilliant mind, which was enriched by culture, her nature vibrated responsive to the piquancy or sympathy of any occasion as a pendulum be ween a smile and a tear. Ever moving the central figure of a charmed dircle, she combined with her graces of form nose of exalted Christian excellence, and when the dread summons rung its intuitive knell in advance of the approach of the grim messenger, her faith proclaimed its triumph Calmly, seariessly the cutered the portals of the pale realm of shade, bearing in her hand emblem of her salvation "Early, bright, transient, Chaste as morning dew Her spirit sparkles, Was exhaled and went to heaven."
